W.J.C. Urges Court Free Of "Victor Justice"

The establishment of a permanent International Criminal Court which could not be accused of practicing "victor justice" or "party justice" has been urged by the World Jewish Congress in a memorandum submitted to UN Secretary General Lie for transmission to the UN Committee on International Criminal Jurisdiction meeting in Geneva. This position was in opposition to that of British Attorney General Sir Frank Soskice, who told the Geneva meeting that the nations of the world were not yet ready for such a court and that it might become "the focus of international discord."

The WJ Congress, on the contrary, pointed out that an established international criminal court "has of necessity a much higher moral authority" than one created, as was the court set up at Nuremberg to try the chief Nazis after World War II, for a specific purpose. The memorandum also declared that a permanent court, backed by the full prestige of the UN, would rise above international politics and would, by its nature, prevent accusations that the victor was trying the vanquished or that "party justice" was involved. Further the establishment of special courts for every violation of international criminal law would require considerable time, "a very important element in prosecution of crimes," and that such cou ts cannot,

10,000 Jam N.Y. Streets At Cahan Funeral

A funeral service for Abraham Cahan, retired editor of The Jewish Daily Forward, was held in New York at 175 East Broadway, the home of the newspaper he had headed for more than forty years. Five hundred persons filled a second-floor auditorium while 10,000 others jammed the surrounding streets to pay a final tribute to the Socialist leader and the lower East Side's first citizen.

The simple, non-religious, eighty-minute service for Mr. Cahan, who died in Beth Israel Hospital at the age of 91, was conducted by Alexander Kahn, general manager of the newspaper. Long before the service was scheduled to begin at 1 p.m., thousands queued up in front of the eleven-story newspaper building from which Mr. Cahan warred vigorously against Communism, on behalf of labor and social reform and the transition of large masses of Jewish immigrants to a new way of life, says the New York Times.

When the doors were closed on the 500 inside the building, Deputy Chief Inspector John Ferretti, in charge of a detail of thirty policemen, said 10,000 persons filled Strauss Square and Seward Park. They and others who took up points of vantage in tenement windows and on fire escapes heard the service through loudspeakers.

Taken together they were representative of every stratum of official life, of other faiths and every economic station. The stillness both inside and outside the building was broken by the rumble of near-by traffic and the muted strains of organ melodies, but the people were silently unanimous in their reverence for the man whose name was a by-word among his own people.

His oak coffin, blanketed with gladioli, lillies, smilax and red roses, stood in the center of Forward Hall just in front of a small stage crowded with floral displays. At 1 p.m., Lazare Weiner, the organist, tread softly on his pedals and opened the service with Chopin's Funeral March. Asa's Death from the Peer Gynt Suite by Grieg followed. Alexander Kahn then arose and spoke of his former colleague.

"He was of the first to fight Communists," Mr. Kahn said. "He was of the first to relegate party tradition and support Roosevelt. His idealism was always guided by a sense of the real and when the interests of the people and his country came into conflict with any tradition or dogma he resolved in favor of the interests of the people."

Mayor Impellitteri said it was his privilege as Mayor to pay tribute to "the late, great Abe Cahan" on behalf of the city's 8,000,000 people.

"He was a powerful voice for justice and equal opportunity for all men," the Mayor said. "Our troubled era will surely miss the greatness that was Abe Cahan, but his works and his writings will sustain us in the job of building a better world for everyone."

Maurice Tobin, Secretary of Labor, eulogized the founder of The Forward as "a great fighter for free trade unions." He said not only Americans, but working men throughout the world "suffered a great loss" in Mr. Cahan's death.

Praising Mr. Cahan for his contributions to improved living standards, Mr. Tobin said the former editor "lived to see the American worker getting the best minimum wage of the entire world." He paid warm tribute to Mr. Cahan for his leadership of the Jewish daily, which he held played "a great part in the elimination of sweatshops and tenement slums."

"We should as Americans say 'Thank God' for the day Abe Cahan arrived in the Uited States," he continued.

David Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, recalled the role played by Mr. Cahan in staving off Communist control of his union. Were it not for the courage of the Socialist leader, Mr. Dubinsky asked, "how many unions would have been captured and how many workers would have been enslaved."

Abba Eban, Israeli Ambassador to the United States, brought tributes from the Government and people of Israel. Alluding to Mr. Cahan's roles in furthering social progress and in Yiddish Journalism, Ambassador Eban said he preserved Jewish consciousness and culture against the tide of assimilation, says the New York Times.

Others who spoke were Justice Jacob Panken of the Domestic Re-

Says Only Vast Flow Of U.S. Cash Can Keep Gates Open

The United Jewish Appeal will undertake a special emergency cash mobilization drive in more than 3,000 United States communities to raise $35,000,000 before the end of 1951. This was announced in Jerusalem, by Edward M. Warburg, of New York, general chairman of the Appeal, after a conference with Premier David Ben-Gurion.

The fund is needed mainly because 60,000 Jews in distress areas in the Near East and eastern Europe must be brought to Israel before the end of the year. Only a vast flow of cash from the United States could keep the gates open for those who must come and provide them with temporary shelter and other assistance, Mr. Warburg added.

He said immediate steps were being taken to call a national report meeting in New York October 27. Communities throughout the United States would be invited to send representatives bearing the greatest cash sums possible toward fulfillment of the $35,000,000 goal. At a similar meeting last year in Chicago a $12,750,000 fund was raised, Mr. Warburg said.

Mr. Warburg told Premier Ben-Gurion the United Jewish Appeal had raised more than $55,000,000 in cash since the start of the year. The Premier expressed gratification over the results and praised the organization's effort.

Rabbi Israel Goldstein of New York, president of the World Confederation of General Zionists, declared in a farewell message that American Zionists were going home "challenged and disturbed by the views of their colleagues in Israel. "The Americans will have to ponder the meaning and purport of Zionism more seriously and more deeply," he said.

Echoing criticism of many United States delegates who felt they

Israel Endures Worst Food Crisis For Sake Of Future Production Plan

The worst of many food crises that Israel has faced in the three years since she became a state has developed in the last two months. Now that stocks bought in the United States last spring have been depleted the full effects of last winter's catastrophic drought are being felt throughout the country. Some relief is in sight. Aid now being discussed in the United states Congress and funds from the Israeli bond drive should become available soon. Part of this money will have to be used for immediate food purchases, says the New York Times.

Any improvement in the food situation is likely to be only slight and it can be only temporary. Every analysis of the cause of these endemic crises leads to the same conclusion — the unabated flood of new immigrants that increases the need far more quickly than production can be increased. According to present and apparently unalterable plans, immigration is to continue unchecked until the population is raised by another 500,000 to a total of 2,000,000 by the end of 1953.

Aside from supplies they can find on the black market, many Israelis have now been reduced to living mainly on bread and cheese. Although this is midsummer there have been virtually no vegetables or fruit available in the last two months. The shops often remain closed for days because they have nothing to sell.

The meat ration has been cancelled for three weeks, and even when it is distributed it amounts to only one-quarter of a pound a person a week. There was no sugar ration last month. In the last five weeks there has been an issue of two pounds of potatoes a person and that only in some parts of country.

Even milk supplies for the children—maintained in the past despite all difficulties—have suddenly been reduced to eight quarts monthly and there is no milk ration for adults. About the only non-rationed foods are olives, dry cheese, bread and frozen fish, but as a result they are hard to find.

Although there have been no public statements about the situation, doctors and nutrition experts have privately expressed concern over the effects of this minimum and unbalanced diet on the country's health.

More and more people who have consistently refused to have anything to do with the black market have reluctantly turned to it in the last six weeks in order to feed their children, according to the New York Times. As it is, there is a tendency for the country's women to deprive themselves to a dangerous point in order to give a larger share to their children.

One family of four, which can be considered typical, said that last week it found itself with nothing to eat except a bit of bread and a small dab of margarine—and that after days of shopping, the housewife, who is a doctor, turned to the black market for the first time and for £15 ($42) was able to buy two large cans of bully beef and half a small chicken for her child, and four pounds of potatoes.

Distribution has become erratic. The reduced energy available on the poor diet has to be expended more than ever before on shopping and searching for supplies. In most families men have to help out, as the task is too much for housewives alone. The ice shortage has placed an additional burden on consumers since what food can be found spoils quickly in the intense Mediterranean heat. When ice [illegible] be bought it has to be purchased from trucks in the street and car-

DEATHS

Samuel Joseph Silverman died at his home, 5814 Durocher Avenue, in his eighty-fifth year, on Sunday, August 26. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Gittel Mary Issenman Silverman; seven sons, Harry, Charles, George, Louis, Archie, Lawrence, Julius; three daughters, Misses Rose, Ethel, and Pauline Silverman; nine grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. Funeral service took place from Paperman's, Dr. C. N. Denburg, Rabbi, officiating. Burial was in Pinsker cemetery. Shiva was at the home.

Jack Uditsky, 137 St. Catherine Road, died suddenly, in his fifty-fourth year, at the Jewish General Hospital, on August 27. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Dora Uditsky; a daughter, Mrs. Ben. Gordon (Mary); two sons, William and Joshua; six grandchildren; a brother, Mendel; and two sisters, Mrs. Leah Cohen, and Mrs. I. Osnas (Annie). Funeral service took place from Beth David Synagogue, Rabbi J. Teicher officiating. Burial was in Beth David cemetery. Shiva was at the home. Mr. Uditsky was a prominent business man and president of Beth David Congregation since 1940. He was head of the textile firm of J. Uditsky and Sons, which he founded 35 years ago. Born in Russia, he came here as a child. During his tenure as president of the congregation, the longest in its history, Beth David Synagogue was renovated and improved and the membership increased. He was a director of the Jewish Hospital of Hope; governor of the Young Men's Hebrew Association and United Talmud Torahs; a member of Bnai Brith Mount Royal Lodge; the Mizrachi Organization of Canada; and the Jewish Community Council; and was a worker in the United Israel campaign.

N.Y. YIDDISH DAILY RESUMES

After sixteen weeks of suspended publication because of negotiations in connection with a change of management, The Jewish Morning Journal, Yiddish-language daily morning newspaper, of New York, is being published by a new corporation, the Associated Jewish Journal, Inc., of which Benjamin G. Browdy is president and Benjamin Glazer is board chairman. David L. Mekler will remain as editor-in-chief.

Mr. Glazer said that for more than fifty years the paper had played a role in the impartial presentation of Jewish News. The publication, he asserted, would "report every happening in Israel," record daily the activities of all Zionist bodies in the United States and "lay greater emphasis on the every-day activities of the American Jewish community." It would "above all," he said, "continue to serve as a spiritual link between the Jewish people in Israel and the Jewish people in America."

JDC In Tunis Aid 150 Youngsters To Learn Trades

BY SYLVIA HURWITZ

In the frail but talented hands of little Jules Baranez, 14-year-old Jewish youngster of the hara (ghetto) of Tunis, can be read the finely integrated results of the Joint Distribution Committee's apprenticeship program there. Jules, until a few months ago indistinguishable from the hundreds of other dirty, ragged urchins who swarm through the twisting alleys of Tunis' Jewish quarter, today is gainfully employed and on the way to recovery from a crippling childhood disease. The amazing change in his life has come about because he passed through the processing machinery of JDC's Apprentissage des Jeunes Juifs (Jewish Youth Apprenticeship) which, since its establishment a year ago, has begun to revolutionize the Jewish community of Tunisia with funds from the United Jewish Appeal.

The story really begins last summer, when JDC sought to find some sort of beneficial activity for hara youngsters who, despite the many vacation camps set up by "Joint," still could not be accommodated in them. The experimental solution took the form of a program which assembled 100 adolescents, 75 boys and 25 girls between the ages of 14 and 17, for supervised education and recreation activities every afternoon.

None of these "forgotten" children had ever been to school and few could read or write. But they were quick to learn, and their devoted instructors, illiteracy conquered, even began to give Hebrew lessons to supplement the daily sports and swimming programs. The youngsters were fed, too, given fresh, clean clothing and medical attention. By the end of the three-month summer period they had been transformed into normal human beings. But what was to be done to keep them that way? It was to answer this all-important question that the idea of the Apprentissage was conceived.

Emile Taieb, a young Jewish lawyer, volunteered to head the program. Because he is a former Tunisian swimming champion and is idolized by the young people of Tunis, he had little trouble convincing the youngsters who had taken part in JDC's summer experiment that learning useful trades with a small starting salary paid by JDC was preferable to spending their time begging on the streets. Since its beginnings less than a year ago, the apprenticeship scheme has come a long way. Now 150 boys and girls are actively employed and most of them, like Jules Baranez, have justified the confidence placed in them. Employers besiege the Apprentissage with demands for young helpers. Twelve "graduates" of the training program have already gone to Israel, equipped with valuable skills to contribute to their new nation.

Jules Baranez' case history illustrates how radically the lives of Tunisia's Jewish youths are altered the moment they come into contact with the program. When he entered the Vocational Guidance Center to be tested, Jules was a pitiful sight, dirty, pinch-faced and stunted from undernourishment, painfully timid, his wasted right hand hanging limply at his side. The tests and interviews revealed an unusual result. Jules wanted desperately to draw pictures and do lettering. Moreover, he seemed to have real talent. But who would hire a youngster with a crippled arm who wanted to be an artist?

Finally Mr. Taieb and the social worker attached to Apprentissage interested a commercial artist in taking young Jules on trial. Within a month the crippled youngster had proved his worth. The artist called Mr. Taieb to announce that Jules had displayed enough promise for him to begin to pay half his salary. And today Jules is using both hands to earn his living, including his heretofore useless right hand. When Jules was interviewed by the Apprentissage to determine his vocational aptitudes, the social worker noted his disability and arranged for him to be examined by a physician from the JDC-supported OSE clinic. An operation was recommended and was successful enough to permit almost full use of his right hand. Scores of other Jewish youngsters, once written off as delinquents, are taking their places in society as proud, productive citizens.

ISRAEL AFTER THE POLL

BY SAMUEL ROLBANT, OF TEL-AVIV, ISRAEL, IN THE NEW STATESMAN AND NATION, OF LONDON, ENGLAND

The state of Israel, too small to enjoy the benefits of constituency elections, and yet unversed in the intricacies of most Continental systems, has had a second dip at proportional representation, after the first Knesset had served only half its term. Some thirty lists were submitted, including Party of Peace, anti-Communist Front, Guardians of Israel, and so forth. The Central Election Committee, however, unimpressed by the spiritual pretensions of all the applicants, invalidated some of them. Altogether some 1,500 persons, representing 17 parties, some of whom have only been in the country since the beginning of the year, and were unable to sign their names in the language of the country, have been contesting the 120 seats.

For a country with a population of just over one million and a quarter, and a electorate of 850,000, of whom 75,000 are Arabs, this seems a remarkably diversified assault upon popular approval, and is no doubt a sign of great upheaval. The standard issues of political ideologies are here aggravated by racial, communal and religious issues jealously claiming solution and attention. Israel politics possess the self-consciousness and anxiety of a mother who has given birth to the first boy born in the family for several generations.

The election campaign was crude and bitter. Goods were withheld by various trade associations to prove that people lived in a "regime of economic chains." One of the largest shoemaking factories in Israel had cornered 50,000 pairs of sorely-needed shoes, and was taken over by the Government 24 hours before polling started. The Icemakers' Association suddenly discontinued the supply of ice on the pretext that machines had broken down, but set them in motion again under the Government's threat to take drastic measures.

The sudden appearance in shops of rationed goods, unseen and unhonoured since June, was also attributed to election strategy. Promises, threats, rumours, accusations of bribery, treachery, immorality, which would have normally sent their authors to various terms of repentance, were exchanged freely and naturally. "The only thing that was not tried in these elections," declared one leading Israeli, "is the earthquake." Even so, hundreds of Arab villagers are said to have spent the night in open fields of Galilee for fear of reprisals, if they did show up in force to reassert their faith in Israel democracy by voting for the Druze People's Party.

The most important facts which emerge from the voting are the rise of the Right-wing General Zionist Party, which has now become the second largest party with 18 per cent, the disintegration of the ex-terrorist Freedom Party, now reduced to 6 per cent, and the inevitability of another coalition led by the Israel Labour Party, Mapai. Superficially it seems strange that there is a self-conscious conservative movement in a country with neither heavy industry nor big business; with neither traditional aristocracy nor landed gentry; where a rich Jew is simply a poor Jew with money.

The 1949 elections, indeed, confirmed this absence of a higher economic strata, by giving the General Zionists 7 per cent of the country's vote. Since then, however, two things have happened. The demagogy of the Freedom movement and other splinter Right-wing parties have convinced many of their supporters that these parties have nothing to sell that is not already, somewhat more lavishly displayed in the shop windows of the General Zionists. The second factor is the deep sociological changes which have taken place in Israel with the arrival of new immigrants, who nearly doubled the population of the country.

The recent wave of immigration has brought into the cities of Israel little of the idealism which went to mould Jewish Palestine into a progressive labour commonwealth, and many of the things which the Jewish National Home was meant to abolish.

It brought to the country thousands of black marketeers from post-war Germany, smugglers from Damascus, horse-flesh dealers and horse thieves from Turkey, professional Rumanians, toughs from Morocco, billiard boys from Casablanca, currency dealers from Shanghai, British subjects who could not solve their differences with H.M. Inspector of Taxes, embezzlers from all countries to which they cannot be extradited, estate property dealers, contact-men, peddlers, gamblers, speculators and bona fide shopkeepers, and thousands of others who simply embody the age-long Jewish tradition of living by avoiding productive labour. Organised government is their eternal foe; Gesheft—one-man-business without premises—is their ideal. They represent a hard core of ungovernables, for whom "America" is not only a model society, but also, if possible, the final goal.

General Zionism, with its insistence on the free enterprise and other stock-in-trade slogans of conservative wisdom, is not only a promise but an apologia for a way of life. Labour Israel not only threatens their very existence as free agents but aims at reducing them to mere labourers or, alternatively, driving them into a communal settlement to end their days, like everybody else there, money-less and property-less. Led by a coterie of ward politicians, ambitious Mayors and chairman of various employers' associations, the General Zionist party is the party of the Jewish Ghetto par excellence, seeking to perpetuate itself in defiance of changed circumstances.

The failure of Mapai, despite the unquestioned pre-eminence of its leaders, to attain a suitable majority is commonly attributed to the Government's inability to eliminate the black market, which is tearing big holes in the pockets of the workers and salaried persons; to its failure to curb vast profits leading to a subsequent flight of currency abroad and depreciation of the Lira. Inflation has always been the ruin of democratic government, and Israel inflation is showing no sign of abating.

There is no doubt that if the State fails to direct to essential labour its fast growing parasitic element, Mapai will soon be faced with the alternative which faced European Social-Democracy. The notion that private and socialised industry can exist side by side is valid only if private enterprise is productive and offers additional fields of employment. The state of Israel, burdened with a large and highly trained army, and faced with the task of absorbing and rehabilitating a hundred thousand camp inmates, cannot afford its "Hatton Gardens," which make some streets of Tel-Aiv unpassable.

Mapam has not lost as much as was commonly expected. The

POSTSCRIPT TO BELSEN

BY DR. F. BRASSLOFF, WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS OFFICE IN GERMANY

When units of the British Army liberated the concentration camp of Belsen in May, 1945, they were staggered by the horrible sight of dead and dying victims of monstrous and callous brutality. Lying in heaps were the corpses of those who had perished as a result of Nazi mass extermination. There were 13,000 of them. Many thousands had died before and thousands were yet to die.

But in that spring of 1945 which was to bring peace to Europe, more than 50,000 Jewish men and women were found to be still alive. Out of their efforts and amidst these shambles grew a new community of survivors. They felt most urgently that desire to make themselves understood to the outside world. It was not a matter of language; they spoke many. But they elected representatives to act on their behalf. Public opinion of the world had still not grasped what had happened within the barbed wires of Belsen and other camps. It was difficult, it seemed, to understand the state of mind of the human remnants of the Nazi hell. But it was, no doubt, equally difficult to bear with the apparent lack of imagination of the outer world for the physical and mental sufferings of those who were soon conveniently and euphemistically to be labelled "Displaced Persons".

The Jewish D.Ps. settled down at Belsen, as they thought, for a short while. Their first census was taken in September, 1945. There were then still more than 10,000 left to stay where they had suffered so abominably under the whip of the Nazi tortures and where their own kin had been murdered by people, many of whom now, no doubt, claim to have been "always good democrats".

Against the background of these bitter and tragic memories which could leave little space for a policy of forgiving "realism", the restraint this community showed in the immediate post-war years in giving expression to their strong feelings is rather surprising. They concentrated their efforts on rebuilding their own lives and on re-integrating themselves into the Jewish community of the world.

On the site of the Belsen concentration camp, the Belsen "D.P. camp" came into being. It was to become a focal point for liberated Jews in the British Zone of Germany, and its Central Committee, created by democratic elections, soon took charge of day-to-day affairs and also provided valuable spiritual guidance. In co-operation with the British Occupation authorities, and with the help of international Jewish organisations, social, religious and cultural welfare services, departments for emigration as well as for the tracing of missing relatives, were quickly established.

Jewish relief organisations from the United States and Great Britain stepped in to help in the creation of a hospital, schools and kindergartens, which were most urgently needed. Glyn Hughes Hospital, put at the disposal of the Jewish D.Ps. immediately after the liberation, acquired a good reputation in the course of the years. When, in January 1948, the birth of the thousandth baby since the liberation was celebrated, it was proudly recorded that the infant mortality rate of this hospital was 0.6 per cent lower than that of similar English and German institutions.

Much was done at Belsen in the immediate post-war years to bring the survivors of the Nazi camp back to normality. But even those whose physical and mental health had been restored were longing for the most essential prerequisite of a normal life, a real home. To live on relief (even if it was charity under self-administration) in hostile German surroundings, was just as hateful to them as the thought of returning to their countries of birth in Central and Eastern Europe where cemeteries were all that was left of a formerly flourishing Jewish life. It took some time and the lessons of the "Exodus" incident before the outside world grasped the determination of these Jewish D.Ps. to fight for their right to live in freedom and dignity.

When, in the summer of 1947, the British authorities saw fit to send back to Germany a shipload of displaced persons, bound on a hazardous journey to Palestine, the fierce resistance shown by these Jewish men and women came as a surprise. It was in this difficult situation that the World Jewish Congress intervened. Contact was established between those not yet deafened by continuous appeals for sympathy for the victims of Nazi persecution and others of the "official mind" whose attitude had created a dangerous position.

Co-operation between the Central Committee of Liberated Jews in Belsen and the World Jewish Congress has remained close during the six years of the camp's existence. The survivors of Nazi horror realised perhaps more than other Jews who had been spared their experiences, the need for practising Jewish unity. Through the Congress they were given support without patronage. The Central Committee of Belsen, just as the Central Committee at Munich, had seat and vote in its councils. The World Jewish Congress stepped in whenever its help was sought and serious obstacles arose in the relations between the Occupying Powers and the D.Ps.

And there were many such difficulties which it might be instructive to recall today. There was the threat of German police raiding the camp which created an ugly situation. There were the incidents which arose when luggage of emigrants to Israel was impounded by the Customs without authority. There was, last but not least, the short notice demand by the military for evacuation of the camp. A good many similar events could be listed. In all these cases, the World Jewish Congress was able to represent successfully the interests and wishes of the Jewish community of Belsen.

When unhampered admittance to Israel became possible and migration to other countries was stepped up, this community, of course, quickly decreased. In the autumn of 1950, the camp population was reduced to some 1000 people, two-thirds of whom were invalids and other "hard core" cases, as well as members of their families. They were removed to Jever camp, a block of buildings in pleasant surroundings in the countryside of Oldenburg which once served for the recreation of the Luftwaffe.

Now, one year later, this settlement has been liquidated, in good order and according to plan, and the camp will be taken over by the R.A.F. Of the three hundred people left at Jever two hundred went to Wentorf, an American transit centre near Bremen, to await transport to the United States. Over one hundred left Jever for Israel on the eve of the Zionist Congress, placing a symbolical seal upon a remarkable chapter of Jewish survival and rebirth.

CLASS IN COOKERY

BANANA CAKE

one-quarter pound butter
one cup sugar
two eggs
one teaspoon vanilla flavoring
one teaspoon baking soda
two bananas
one and one-half cups flour
one-half teaspoon salt
four tablespoons sour cream
one teaspoon baking powder

Mash bananas. Cream butter and sugar together; add beaten eggs, vanilla, and bananas. Sift flour, baking powder, and salt together once. To the banana mixture, add alternately: the flour mixure and sour cream, to which has been added the baking soda. Bake in 350-degree oven, for three-quarters of an hour. After heat has been turned off, let cake stand in oven for fifteen minutes.

Mrs. M. Goldman,
541 Shaw Street, Toronto.

SKI JUMPERS

one cup shortening
one cup brown sugar
three-quarters cup sour milk
two cups flour
one teaspoon baking soda
two cups rolled oats
one-half teaspoon salt

Cream shortening; mix in brown sugar and dry ingredients, alternately with the milk. Roll out on a floured board to one-quarter inch thick, and cut in oblongs or rounds. Bake in a greased sheet, in a hot oven, until brown. While cookies are still hot, spread with date filling or thick plum jam, making sandwiches of the cookies, pressing the cookies together. Roll in icing sugar.

LAWYER WAS NOTED AS WELFARE BOARD HEAD

A funeral service was held at the Jewish Community Center at White Plains, N.Y., for Lawrence S. Greenbaum, noted trial and appelate attorney, who was former chairman of the New York State Board of Social Welfare. He died in his home, at 724 Stuart Avenue, Mamaroneck, at the age of 62.

Rabbi Lawrence W. Schwartz, of the Center, conducted the brief service, which was attended by 250 relatives and friends from the court, bar, government and club circles in which Mr. Greenbaum was active. Burial was in the family plot at Temple Israel Cemetery, Mount Hope, Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y.

Herbert A. Wolff, a member of the New York law firm of Greenbaum, Wolff & Ernst, of which Mr. Greenbaum was senior partner, paid tribute in a eulogy to the associate with whom he had been intimate for forty years as "a fellow student, law partner and warm friend."

Emphasizing the "deep love which all of us have for Laurie Greenbaum," he extolled "the grand qualities which endeared him to so many in all walks of life."

Among those present were representatives of the State Surpeme Court, state, county and city bar groups, the State Board of Social Welfare, of which Mr. Greenbaum served as a member and chairman under Governors Lehman and Dewey; the State Department of Insurance, of which he was former special counsel; the Elks and the Beach Point Club, Mamaroneck, of which he was a founder and first president.

R. I. GOVERNOR BIDS JEWS HOLD ONTO TORAH

Tribute to the Newport Jews of the Colonial period for their contributions to the founding of the U.S. was paid by Gov. Dennis J. Roberts at exercises in historic Touro Synagogue, commemorating the 161st anniversary of the letter which George Washington sent to the congregation proclaiming religious tolerance.

"It will be a tragedy if the lineal and collateral descendants of those Americans to whom Washington wrote, with precaution and prophecy, should forget the tradition of the Torah and Talmud."

Dr. Samuel Adelson, former president of the congregation, presided and other speakers included Mayor Dean J. Lewis and Alderman Alexander G. Teitz, of Newport, R. I., and Jerome Barron, guide at the synagogue, who told of the 10,000 visitors in the last year.

"This Newport was an important city and its Hebrews made themselves an important and valued part of community life," Governor Roberts said. "They were distinguished individuals going from the synagogue to make golden pages in the anuals of Americanism, bringing to life the invocation of Washington in his precious letter."

At a Folk Dance Camp, sponsored by the College of the Pacific and the California Folk Dance Federation, Israel folk dances were among dances of America, Latin America, Europe and Asia performed by leading dancers and teachers in the field. A folk dance festival showed the Israel folk dance, "Mayim" (Water) during the celebrations making the opening of the great Shasta Dam which took place during the institute. The background and teaching of the Israel folk dances were presented by Mrs. Dvora Lapson of the Jewish Education Committee of New York.

"Pillar of Life" is the new symbol of the first joint campaign for the Combined Jewish Appeal and the United Israel Appeal, Samuel Bronfman is honorary chairman of both organizations. The campaign will be conducted November 1 - 15. Supported by the Combined Jewish Appeal are the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies and the Jewish General Hospital. The Jewish Community Camps; Hillel Foundation at McGill University, and the Jewish Public Library are also partners in the annual appeal; also the Canadian Jewish Congress and the Jewish Immigrant Aid Society. The United Israel Appeal, campaigning with the Combined Jewish Appeal for the first time this year, supports large-scale programs of relief, immigration resettlement and rehabilitation in Israel, where the rate of immigration is expected to continue at approximately 200,000 a year in 1952. With supplies bought in Canada and shipped to Israel, aid is provided in establishing settlements, medical care is provided and immigrants now living in tent cities are rehabilitated and integrated into Israeli life. Supplies are bought in this country with Canadian dollars.

recent conference of the United Workers' Party adopted a compromise, pro-Comintern resolution reasserting its unconditional support of the Eastern Bloc. A party drawing its strength principally from communal settlements, Mapam has been lately in the throes of sharp internal ideological conflict which resulted in the victory of the faction led by Moshe Sneh.

Brilliant and biting, the former chief of the Haganah has been terrorising the Government and, unlike his comrades who see in Ben Gurion "a stooge of American Imperialism," treating the Prime Minister as an old man with an arrested mind and a determination to unlearn nothing learnt forty years ago. There is a consensus of opinion that Dr. Sneh will be Israel's Prime Minister when Providence charitably bestows upon her the status of Popular Democracy. This time, however, Providence was occupied elsewhere, and Mapam received only 12 per cent of the votes.

Including the Communists, against whom Mapam have been waging a private ideological warfare, and who are now represented by two Arabs and three Jews, there will be 22 messengers of the World Peace Movement in the second Knesset. The Jewish Parliament will also have 1 Druze, 4 pro-Mapai Arabs, 1 Yemenite and two Oriental Jews, 4 Progressives, 7 ex-terrorists, 14 pious Jews, 20 General Zionists and 45 members of the Labour Party.

With the Mapai-Mapam coalition ruled out by the foreign policy of the latter, and now rendered constitutionally impossible, Mapai will have to turn to the splinter parties of the Centre, notably to the Religious Bloc, the small Progressive (Liberal) Party, and, possibly to the Arabs. The opinion is gaining around that, if Israel cannot have a broadly representative government, it must have a stable government, which can only be attained by a regional system of election. That would mean calling for new elections, and revising the electoral law, to which there will be united opposition.

lations Court, Alex Rose, president of the United Hatters, Cap and Millinery Workers Union; Harry Rogoff, editor of The Forward; Nathan Chanin, educational director of the Workmen's Circle; Joseph Baskin, general secretary of the Workmen's Circle; Raphael Abrahamovitch, for the International Socialist movement, and Reuben Guskin, president of United Hebrew Trades.

Five cars, heavily banked with flowers, led a fifty-car procession to the cemetery. Burial was in Mount Carmel Cemetery, Queens.

Mr. Cahan, who was also known for his novels, ceased to take an active part in the operations of the paper two years ago because of failing health.

Through his writing and editing, he introduced America to two generations of immigrant Jews, became a policy maker for a substantial segment of the labor movement and was one of the most uncompromising foes of communism in American Jewish life. A democratic socialist since his youth in Russia, Mr. Cahan built "The Jewish Daily Forward" into one of the most powerful foreign language newspapers in the United States.

With the hordes of immigrants swarming into the needle trades and other industries, and at the same time into unions led by Socialists, "The Forward" became their paper and their spokesman. Years later, when the same needle unions had won their battles for higher pay and decent working conditions, and had become rich and powerful institutions, Mr. Cahan's appearance at a meeting invariably evoked cheers.

He became a close friend and associate of many labor leaders, including William Green, A. F. L. president, and David Dubinsky, head of the A. F. L.'s International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. During the internecine warfare between the A. F. L. and C. I. O. Mr. Cahan sided with the Federation. Mr. Cahan ardently supported President Roosevelt's new Deal and President Truman's Fair Deal.

Mr. Cahan's faith in America never wavered says the New York Herald Tribune. In a birthday interview in July, 1949, he said that America is strong and healthy, will survive the threats of Communism and depression and will in the future produce men as mighty as it has in the past.

Ab Cahan, as he signed himself in Yiddish, was born in Vilna, Russia, on July 7, 1860, the son of Schachno and Scheine Sarah Cahan. His father, a deeply religious man, wanted Abraham to become a rabbi but after studying literature he became a teacher. Because of his political activities he became suspect, and finally left Russia. He arrived at Castle Garden in 1882 with $2 in his pocket and a vision of a story-book America. He planned to go to Oregon where a co-operative colony called New Odessa was being formed, but after seeing the hunger and squalor of New York's lower east side he knew his destiny was there.

In his first three months in the United States he learned enough English to begin giving lessons to other immigrants, and he paid for his room by teaching Hebrew to the children of his landlord. Having been educated in Russia, he was able to complete elementary and high school in two years. From those humble beginnings with the English language there emerged eventually a powerful literary style that caused William Dean Howells to describe Mr. Cahan as "the new star of realism in American literature."

In 1897 guests at a Socialist ball collected $800 to start a newspaper and thus "The Jewish Daily Forward" was started with Mr. Cahan as its editor. The founders of the paper, idealists, knew nothing about the mechanics of publishing, and after a short time Mr. Cahan left "The Forward" to work for "The Commercial Advertiser," where his city editor was Lincoln Steffens.

By 1907 "The Forward's" circulation had dropped to 6,000 and Mr. Cahan was invited back as editor. He agreed to return, provided he received a free hand. He insisted on putting news on the front page, confining editorials to the editorial page and introducing features which, while not directly connected with socialism, attracted readers. Over the years "The Forward" became a great financial success and for many years supported the Socialist party and other causes, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. Cahan urged readers to write of their problems—marriage, lost relatives, cleanliness and anything else that concerned them. In addition he met the readers personally, listening to the problems of disappointed age or questioning youth.

"In the great daily an editor is exactly—an editor," Mr. Cahan said. "On the East Side he is an editor, a rabbi, a sympathizer and a friend."

ISRAEL ENDURES

ried home, as deliveries have been cancelled.

The situation has brought much criticism on the Government. The complaints have been directed almost entirely at the faulty distribution. There is general recognition that the basic cause of the food shortage is the country's lack of foreign exchange for both consumer needs and investment requirements.

For better or for worse, the Government has decided that the present sacrifice is worth while in order to make investments essential for the future expansion of production. New plants and new farm units have been started in a steady rhythm.

A four-year agriculture plan has just been launched which aims at making the country self-sufficient in all foods except meat and grains and in supply of half of these two items. It contemplates establishment of 50,000 new farm units and quadrupling the present area of irrigated land. It will require an investment of £156,000,000, of which £48,000,000 must be in foreign currency, says the New York Times.

Until this project is completed, the task of running the country's agriculture and food supply will be one of the most difficult jobs in the Government. It has taxed and defeated two of the most able men in the Mapai Socialist party—Dov Joseph, who gave up the post more than a year ago, and Pinhas Lavon, the present Minister of Agriculture, who has told Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion he does not wish to continue in the job when the new Government is formed. According to reports, Mr. Lavon decided to resign because he could not persuade Minister of Finance Eliezer Kaplan to give him enough foreign currency to buy what he considered essential foods.

The growing black market and officially sanctioned privileges for those Israelis who can obtain gifts of foreign currency from abroad have started a debate on moral standards in Israel. The debate at the moment is centered on "dollar shops" which, in the midst of the country's most severe food crisis, have been opened for the purchase of basic and luxury foods in exchange for scrip issued on the payment of dollars into the National Treasury.

Two of these shops are operating. Three more are planned as the joint effort of the Israeli Government and private Israeli and United States investors. The Government expects the five shops to bring about $25,000,000 in foreign currency annually, which would be equal to 30 per cent of its current foreign-exchange expenditure on food supplies.

A number of Israelis have condemned these shops on two grounds: that they have created a favored class of citizens whose sole basis for preferred treatment is that they have relatives or friends abroad willing and capable of generosity, and that the shops have made a large contribution to the extension of the black market.

For years many Israelis have supplemented their austerity rations with food parcels received from abroad. At one time as many as 200,000 parcels monthly were coming into the country. These have tapered off with the opening of the "dollar shops" where fresh meats and delicacies, which could not have come through the mails, are available.

Concern over the psychological effect of the shops is social as well as moral. Until now, Israel has been very close to a one-class country, a highly prized quality that critics of the Government's action fear will be lost by the unabashed grant of privileges to a proportionately small group, says the New York Times.

David Courtney, the Jerusalem Post's columnist, wrote last week: "Search for rich uncles in America has become the people's unwearying treasure hunt so that honest citizens take on qualities of a dumb blonde on the lookout for a sugar daddy.  Austerity is a deceit if it applies only to the dumb blonde's plain sister who cannot pick up a sugar daddy."

The argument on the other side asserts that the country is so short of both food and foreign currency that any arrangement bringing in both can only be welcomed. Its advocates state simply that moral standards are fine things but there must be people to uphold them and people must eat.

had been treated with disdain in Israel, Rabbi Goldstein declared the rank and file in Israel and particularly the younger generation "would be advised to be more public-relation minded toward Jewish visitors from abroad."

Meanwhile, the Jewish Agency's child and youth immigration department sent messages to the women's Zionist organizations in the United States asking them to allocate at least 30 per cent of their general income for the needs of youth immigration. The messages were sent to Hadassah, the Mizrachi Women's Organization of America in New York, and to the convention of the Pioneer Women's Organization in Chicago. The American Joint Distribution Committee was called upon to enlarge the transit camp for North African children in France and to open new centers in the Mediterranean and North Africa.

as a permanent tribunal could, create stable jurisprudence and accepted interpretations of the applicable law.

There can be no doubt that a body of international criminal law now exists, the memorandum stated, pointing to the Charter of the Nuremberg International Military Tribunal, the Genocide convention, the conventions dealing with slave trade, traffic in women, and traffic in narcotics and finally to "the universally recognized rules of civilized behavior whose violations on an international level may represent an international crime delict." As was amply proven during the last war, many international crimes have no particular geographic location — the crimes extend over a number of states, the WJ Congress added. "In such instances, no single state may justifiably claim sole jurisdiction and, as actually happened in the Second World War, the culprits had to be tried by specially created international courts."

The memorandum was submitted to Secretary General Lie by Dr. Nehemiah Robinson, WJ Congress advisor on Legal Affairs, and Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, Consultant to the UN Economic and Social Council.
